

Scope of Parallelism

- Conventional architectures coarsely comprise of a processor, memory system, and the datapath.
- Each of these components present significant performance bottlenecks.
- Parallelism addresses each of these components in significant ways.
- It is important to understand each of these performance bottlenecks.

