

Employee survey

Notes

Introduction

Use this questionnaire as a template, including only the questions that will provide the information you need.

The Introduction should:

- let the employee know what you are trying to find out from them and why.
- tell them what you will do with their responses and reassuring them that all surveys are anonymous and that individuals will not be contacted directly
- tell them if you are offering any incentive to respond – for example, entering all responses into a prize draw.

Current health habits – physical activity and healthy eating

The aim of this section is to gain a baseline marker for employees' current health habits focusing on physical activity and healthy eating. Specific questions on these two topics are covered in each of the two areas. This information can be used in the ongoing monitoring and evaluation of your health at work programme.

Questions need to relate to individuals' habits in a typical week.

This section should:

- aim to ask questions in areas where the workplace can have some influence
- encourage employees to start thinking about their own health behaviour
- measure the employees' level of commitment to and enthusiasm for a healthy lifestyle
- identify potential barriers to changing

Healthy habits interests – physical activity and healthy eating

The aim of this section is to gain an understanding of employees' interests in getting a healthier lifestyle. This will help to inform the development of the programme. Specific questions on physical activity and healthy eating are covered in each of these two areas.

This section should:

- identify the types of activities and interventions that employees enjoy doing and how provision in the workplace can facilitate them
- determine employees' motivation for participation and give additional incentives for making behaviour changes at work
- assess what health initiatives employees would most like to participate in at work and when.

Mental wellbeing at work

The aim of this section is to gain a picture of employees' satisfaction with the opportunities for looking after their mental wellbeing and their interest in pursuing a healthier lifestyle, and how the workplace can provide opportunities for them to do this.

This section should aim to identify:

- how employees view the demands of the job, and any perceived problems that could be rectified by the organisation
- issues around the amount of control over their job that employees feel they have
- issues around relationships at work
- satisfaction with communication in the workplace
- how employees view their job role, and how well prepared and supported they are.

Health needs

The aim of this section is to gain an understanding of any special needs related to employees' health or medical conditions. Questions therefore need to relate to employees' current health needs, their interest in pursuing a healthier lifestyle, and how the workplace can provide opportunities for them to do this.

This section should:

- highlight any medical condition(s) that may affect an individual's ability to participate
- determine how the employee views his or her workplace to be related to their health and vice versa

Personal profile

The aim of this section is to gain an understanding of employees' work habits and to identify opportunities for healthy habits within the working day.

If your employees work shifts, some of these questions will probably need to be adapted to re-adjust the focus away from lunchtime meals.

This section should:

- give an idea of the structure of the employee's normal working day
- provide employee details such as age and gender.

Scoring instructions

A great number of questions have got five answer options which are ranked from 1 (Very dissatisfied/Extremely unlikely) to 5 (Very satisfied/Extremely likely). This allows you to find out the average value for each question.

How to score the questionnaire

- Look at each question in turn. For each question, add up the total number scored by all staff completing that question. (See the example below.)
- Divide this number by the number of staff who answered that question. This will give the average score for that question, creating an organisational profile. (If someone hasn't answered a question, divide the total score for the question by the number who actually answered it.)
- Repeat for all questions and create an organisational profile.
- You can also look at patterns of response – for example, how gender, age, or other factors affect responses.

Example:

Twenty employees completed question number 11: "Are you satisfied with your working hours?" Each respondent circled a score from 1 to 5 (where 1 = very dissatisfied, and 5 = very satisfied). The numbers circled by the 20 respondents were: 5 + 1 + 1 + 3 + 2 + 1 + 5 + 4 + 3 + 1 + 2 + 1 + 5 + 3 + 4 + 2 + 1 + 1 + 2 + 1 = 48

To calculate the result for this question, divide the total score (48) by the total number of employees who answered the question:

Total score for question number 11 = 48

Total number of employees who answered that question = 20

Result = (48 divided by 20) = 2.4

So, the overall result within the organisation is 2.4, which is between 2 (dissatisfied) and 3 (neutral).
