

Facts about Prepositional Phrases: two rules from WritingFix

A prepositional phrase is formed when you take any preposition is placed in front a noun. Prepositional phrases usually become adverbs or adjectives in sentences.

FACT #1: When you begin a sentence with a prepositional phrase, you should probably separate it from the rest of the sentence with a comma. You don't have to, but usually a comma helps your reader understand your sentence faster and better.

Prepositional Phrase , SUBJECT + PREDICATE (Complete Sentence) .

- During the storm, the family hid in the root cellar.
 - After the championship match, we flocked to the pizza place to celebrate our victory.
 - Because of my lisp, I don't like to talk on the phone.
-

FACT #2: Sentences that start with prepositional phrases are always interesting. If you ever want to make the first sentence in your story sound even better, consider beginning it with a prepositional phrase.

