

First I would like to thank those who influenced my works, many of you here through our discussions in such meetings, and obviously my collaborators and my masters.

I learned doing mathematics by writing what I see, after pushing to my maximum the techniques involved, in order to describe our nature. And this even if, what I wish to describe, was not expected or if it involves complicated techniques.

This certainly made my work difficult to enter into, to publish or to quote.

I would like to thank everybody who judged my work and respect this way: the editors, the referees, and again the jury:
Christian Bonatti, Laura De Marco, Sergei Pilyugin, Masato Tsujii, Marcelo Viana, Lan Wen and Amie Wilkinson.

This prize will encourage me to continue to work hard in mathematics, and I hope it will also encourage the youngest to follow their own way.

Finally, I would like to thank Mrs. Zhang Zhifen for her generosity and her initiative, and the Beijing Mathematical Society for the organization of this prize.

Thank you.
