Why Do We Use APA 7?

Proper academic attribution is vital to the integrity and originality of scholarly work. It is essential that readers of our work can identify an idea's originator and easily locate reference materials to avoid plagiarism and fairly represent the borrowed ideas we use in our work.

The American Psychological Association (APA) has published comprehensive guidelines to assist scholars in developing user-friendly, well-cited academic papers, which are used across all psychology, education, and leadership programs at GSEP. The APA guidelines promote scholarliness and increase the overall usability of academic papers.

Title Page

For the title page, now there are 7 elements for student papers:

- Page number (flush right in the header, starts at 1)
- Title in upper third of page (bolded and centered)
- Author's name (centered)
- Name of affiliated school/department, university (centered)
- Number and name of course (centered)
- Instructor's name (centered)
- Date (centered)

There is no running head required for student papers in APA 7.

Start paper title 3 or 4 double-spaced returns down the page.

This shows the top 1/2 of the page only, the rest should be left blank in a student paper.
For accurate dimensions, view the sample student paper in this guide or download it from APA Style.

First Content Page

At the beginning of the text (typically page 2 in a student paper):

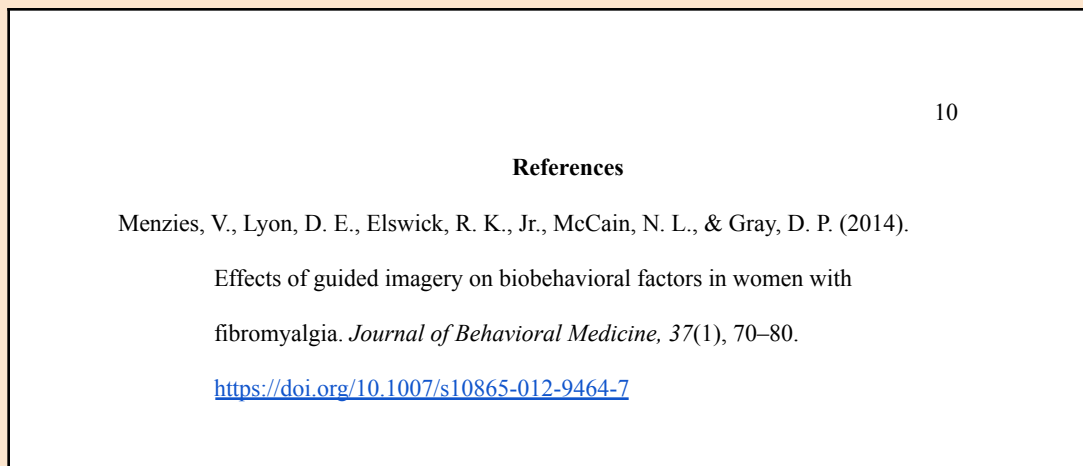

- Add the title of the paper again at the top of the page
  - Centered, bolded, and in Title Case
  - Title Case = All Words Capitalized Except the Minor Words

Paper snippet above is not shown to scale. Download the sample student paper from APA Style.

References

- At the top of a new page, the title References is bolded and centered.
- The label "DOI" is no longer used.
- DOIs and website URLs are now displayed as hyperlinks.
- For books, no city or state of the publisher is required. Use only the publisher's name.

In-Text Citations

- For all citations of 3 authors or more, use only the first author's surname and "et al."

Parenthetical citation: (Smith et al., 2018).

Narrative citation: Smith et al. (2018) argue

- If ideas from only one source within a paragraph are discussed, you will need to cite only once within the paragraph at the first mention. Avoid undercitation and overcitation.

Bias-Free Language

- Precision is essential in scholarly writing; when you refer to a person or persons, choose words that are accurate, clear, and free from bias or prejudicial connotations (all guidelines here).
  - Use exact ages (e.g., 15–18 years old, 65–80 years old) instead of broad categories (e.g., under 18 years old, over 65 years old).
  - Use names of conditions (e.g., Alzheimer's disease) instead of categories of conditions (e.g., types of dementia) or general references (e.g., people with disabilities).
  - Use descriptors with modifiers for gender identity (e.g., cisgender women, transgender women) instead of descriptors without modifiers (e.g., women) or general terms (e.g., people, individuals).
  - Use nation or region of origin for racial or ethnic groups (e.g., Chinese Americans) instead of generalized origin (e.g., Asian Americans).
  - Use the names of people's sexual orientations (e.g., lesbians, gay men, bisexual people, straight people) instead of a broad group label (e.g., gay).
  - Use income ranges or specific designations for socioeconomic status (e.g., below the federal poverty threshold for a family of four) instead of a general label (e.g., low income).
- Use the singular "they" when referring to a person whose gender is unknown or irrelevant.

A child should learn to play by themselves as well as with friends.

Rowan, a transgender person, helped themselves to the free coffee.

- Numbers 10 and above are expressed as numerals unless at the beginning of a sentence (e.g., five members; 12 participants; See APA Style Numbers & Statistics Guide for additional usage rules.)

The researchers selected 22 students.

Twenty-two students were selected.
