

Better late than never Idiom in Sentence Examples

- She finally turned in her project two weeks late, but better late than never.
- I apologize for forgetting your birthday last week; I'm sending a gift now—better late than never.
- "I'm late for the dinner party, aren't I?" "Yes, but better late than never."
- He joined the retirement savings plan at 45; better late than never, he thought.
- I was hesitant to start exercising at my age, but then I thought, better late than never.
- "You finally cleaned your room!" "Yes, Mom, better late than never."
- The government is finally implementing the new environmental policies—better late than never.
- They missed the first half of the concert but arrived in time for the last few songs, figuring better late than never.
- She decided to go back to school and get her degree at 40—better late than never.
- After five years, he finally paid me back the money he owed me; I guess it's better late than never.
- "I finally started reading the Harry Potter series." "Well, better late than never."

- We were late to the wedding, but we made it for the vows, so better late than never.
- He finally proposed to her after dating for ten years—better late than never, she thought.
- After years of delays, the company finally launched its new product, adhering to the principle of better late than never.
- They finally fixed the potholes on my street, and all I could think was better late than never.
- "You're late to the trend; everyone's moved on to new social platforms now." "Better late than never, I guess."
- He only started investing in his health at 50 but quickly realized that it was better late than never.
- She was the last one to finish the marathon, but she proudly thought, better late than never.
- The city's new recycling program was a long time coming, but it's better late than never.
- He didn't start taking guitar lessons until he was in his 30s, but he always believed in the mantra, better late than never.