

Winter's Blanket

Leaves will fall and leave the horizon more bare.

Drifting they will twirl through the sky.

As the long nights take over the days.

Thermometer slowly plunging.

Winter arrived again.

The season of darkness will come again in a flurry.

Snow blanketing the land in frozen crystals.

Night upon us early in the eve we will rest.

Cold freezing us into our homes.

Huddled near the fires.

Time for reading, and movies, and different popcorns in tins.

Drinking hot tea and clearing off the drive.

Brushing off thick drifts of white painting all the cars.

Eggnog and piney scents of evergreen.

Time with family and friends.
